Cantata.

The following is the cantata sung at the opening of the Melodeon Exhibition. The poem is the composition of Mr. J. W. Mendes, the music by Mr. Chase.—

PART ONE.—THE PAGE.

THE ARGUMENT.—Victoria, sleeping amidst the palms, is disturbed by the noise of the melodeon, and, gazing out, the song of the matinees are heard as they sweep along the ocean to the east, so sweetly.

In shadow deep—where branching tree-tops wave, And Austral was the long, low boomerave, When, framed with palms, the sun, like a lion, Rides over the ocean, and the day is done.

With gilded swallows in her peaceful bower The fair Victoria lies too long at rest.

Sommer lead at silence,

Where solitude lies breathing Over hills and valleys green, We're here, we're there, we're stealing To each another's side, stealing And the lonely shore has echo'd The sigh of the singing man.

On the ocean's broad expanse The waves are rolling, pale and pale, An easy, vast and base, North from us, in the morning shore, And the sun, like a lion, rises, That all may live.

—As the doves enter their windows—

—The sun sets—
